“It’s really important that the students get a really good understanding of what is going on nationally and locally. They think that they can only do these amazing things in big cities and they don’t really know what’s available here. Sometimes young people think you can only choose A-Levels and then go to university, so it’s great to give them a better understanding of their options. They have so many questions that we, as a school, can’t answer so here they get to ask specialists and get a more detailed answer. It gives them an opportunity that they wouldn’t get otherwise.”

“I’ve got loads of information and leaflets about the different routes and different roles available. I know I’ve got loads of options, like apprenticeships.”
